

My dearest ZSA members,

The war between us and the giant otter shrew (which is not a shrew) goes on. Due to them being nocturnal hunters (they eat aquatic creatures) the war rages on throughout the night. They tend to sneak attack us alone (They are solitary creatures) causing us to constantly wonder when the fighting will start again. The likelihood we will win this fight is nonexistent (a real Vietnam war-type situation) due to the fact we haven't found a single enemy yet.

If I don't make it back please make sure my ZSA dues are paid for the semester. You can send 20 dollars to the man in town known as Venmo (MSUZSA). Please make sure I die an honorable and active member.

Please do not dwell on my absence my lovely ZSA members and continue to find opportunities in zoology (Join AZA, apply for KBS internships, research, and courses) you never know when the giant otter shrews will attack.

Tonight our battle battalion went over our resumes and cover letters to improve our applications and possibly change the tide in this never-ending war against the giant otter shrews.

Here is a meme to lift your spirits during this tiring war:

with all our love,

ZSA E-Board

p.s. if you are at all confused by the email format this semester we are doing email themes each week (or until we run out of ideas).
