

Hello to the Shrimply best Zoology club members ever!

Yesterday we had a great alumni panel that gave us some great information on vet school, grad school, working for a zoo, and advice on how to fight imposter syndrome (Just to name a few things we talked about) If you want to reach out to any of them with more questions their emails are: lexyritenburgh@gmail.com (grad school and working for the capital area humane society) and martyhome99@gmail.com (All things zoos).

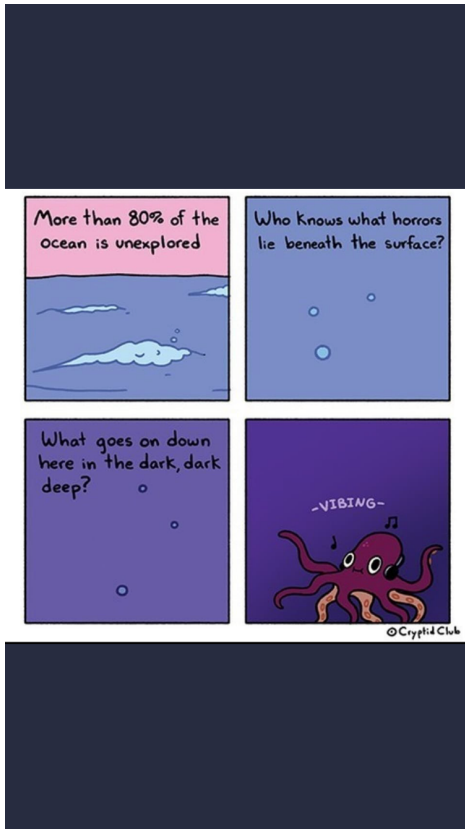

If you have graduated or want to be taken off the email list please fill out this form and we will promptly take you off the email list.

They call me polar, they call me arctic, that's not (exactly) my name, that's not (exactly) my name! That's right folks our animal of the week was the snowy owl! They are one chonky boi thanks to their feathers and they are a great killing machine with a hooked beak that can tear prey to shreds. The E-Board gives the snowy owl a 7/10 as their beak and talons could definitely do some damage to us but we could also just hide inside.

Most internships end in February and March so check out the IBIO hands on database and the FW job board for some great opportunities.

Memes of the week:

That's all for now, see you later alligator!

Love,

Your ZSA E-Board
